

My name is Darryl Jones. I have possessed a love for making my entire life, encompassing various mediums over time. Woodworking has always had a place in my love of making, even at a very young age. My grandfather was no craftsman, but he built a number of items that worked. While his projects were not beautiful, I was always amazed at his ability to create what he needed usually from what he had on hand. This was perhaps the earliest beginnings of the path I find myself on today.

I am a woodworker and maker that is passionate about learning as much as possible about my craft. I am also a maker that is equally passionate about being a good steward of the craft, sharing and educating others about the craft and the immense joy and satisfaction of creating beautiful and practical pieces with their own hands. I also believe that our country was built by makers but has become a consumerist society, I aim to do my part to empower people to harken back to the founding spirit and start making again. I am looking forward to demonstrating how I make boxes on the lathe.
